The Opera and the Theatres.

The prospects of the Opera are getting better with each performance. Nothing finer could be desired than the "Maria di Rohan" on Monday, in which Mme. Gazzaniga made a fire success, and Ferri the greatest Chevreuse we have had here. There is a great deal of in-

is calculated to produce the impression that there exists some misuderstanding between Mr. Strakesch and myself, and that he has withdrawn from the management. This is not the case. Ever since last May, when our association was formed, the best understanding and harmony have marked our relations, and I trust that this union wish and beyond the time stipulated in our agreement, and will ultimately become permanent. In justice to Mr. Strakesch, it cheerfully acknowledge the excellence of the majority of the engagements made by him in Burope. The unqualified success achieved by Ferri and Stigoilli corroborates the soundness of his judgment. Should Beaucarde and Madame Albertini italii all which their great reputation claims for them—and I, for my part, who have frequently beard them in London, Paris, Milan and Venice, do not entertain the least doubt that it will be so—Mr. Strekeech will be entitled to the fullest approciation: at the hands of the patrons of the Opera, since he has signed their contracts at the same time as those of Ferri, Stigelli and Susini. Purely managorial reasons have induced us, however, to keep the engagement of Mms. Albertinia temporary secret. Mr. Strakesch, taking the credit of the good engagements, is of course bound to accept the blame of those which have turned out less fortunate. Their failure only proves that New York requires nothing but the first talent; as the two new prime donne who have appeared do not possess qualifications to take leading parts in an opera house of the rank of the Academy of Music, they will be found useful in completing the ensemble in grand operas, such as Mosart's "Magic Plute," where there are required not less than six prime donne—three for the great parts and three for the minor ones. The addition of Madame Albertini and Signor Beaucarde to the artists aiready before the public constitutes a company of imposing strength and completeness, a company of imposing strength and completeness, a company of imposing strength and completeness, a company of impos

They have called themselves all manner of names, taking a name and wearing it out like an old worn out garment. The old whig name, full of honored memories, lasted longer than any. Now republican has been brought into service, newly whitewashed, and it it lasts them through the next election they will never try it on again. (Applause and laughter.) Opposition is a suitable name—opposition to the constitution, opposition to the best interests of the country, opposition to wound financial system, opposition to good faith and good feeling between the several States. They have opposed every democratic measure, the purchase of Louisiana, the war of 1812, the repeal of a high tariff. Had their counsels prevailed, the Union would now have comprised only the old thriteen States and their Territories; and yet, cramped up as it would have been, it would be too large for this party, for it would have included Georgia, the Carolinas, Tennessee, Kentucky, Virginia, Maryland and Delaware, in which there is no republican party. (Applause.) The republican jacket would have been too small for that cramped and shorn nation. (Cheers and laughter.) How, I would like to knew, do the republican party propose to exercise the government, when they have no local habitation nor a name, and when this great irrepressible army of freedom can never march.

A musical farce, called "Going it Rind," was produced here on Monday, with moderate success. It was origin-ally performed in Paris under the title of "Les Deux Avengles," and is taken from a duct very popular in its day, and illustrating the tricks of two itinerant musicians who pretend to be blind, in order the better to levy conwho pretend to be blind, in order the better to levy contributions on the passers by. The plece is of a class peculiar to Paris, relying solely upon the cleverness of the actors and the quickness of the audience. Such plays are always weak in the back and require an immense deal of bracing up. Even then their reception by the public is always a matter of dubitation. "Going it Blind" has been well treated by all concerned. Miss Walcot has done the translation faithfully. Messrs. Brougham and Walcot, who play the only paris, have contributed sundry local jokes of fair to middling quality, and Mr. Steepel has arranged the music cleverly, bringing in the opera airs which are now most popular with the public.

parlor operas here, on this evening. NIBLO'S SALOON.

George Christy's Minstrels opened their winter dam-paign here last evening. The saloon has been arranged so as to give it a semi-theatrical air. There is a pretty little stage, with a nicely painted proscenium, and a stock of fresh scenery. The performances included several new songs, a buriesque on the Italian Opera, two short burlettas, and a farce by George Christy, called (Schemerhorn's Rev.") Of course the street of the several "Schemerborn's Boy." Of course the star of the ovening was the redoubtable George himself, who is as funny as ever, and received a most cordial reception at the hands of a crowded audience. At the end of the first part he made a characteristically humorous speech. The company is altogether a very good one, and the enterprise has an air of success.

the republican party propose to exercise the government, when they have no local habitation nor a name, and when this great irrepressible army of freedom can never march.

Mr. Dickinson proceeded to speak of the sectional character of the republican party, which was eternally shricking Kansas! Kansas! and nothing but Kansas, and setting in motion such men as Brown to carry fire and sword into the standing corn of their neighbors. In the State affairs the party would not do so much mischief, yet the people of New York had had a taste of its quality in the Registry law, which, in spite of the constitution, raised barriers between the voter and the ballot box in the enormous increase of the public debt to be met by taxation, which would make the miscles of the laboring man stand out like whip cord. He referred also to the Metropolitan Police bill, which he regarded as an oppressive and unjust act. This republican party was a party unworthy to be trusted. The evil was plain, and so was the remedy. It was, that the democratic party which has stolen into power and torn the vitals of this, the greatest State in the Union. He had lately passed through the State of New York, and was never so much impressed with its immense elements of prosperity. This great metropolis was destined to become the London of the New World. He appealed to the capitalists, the owners of real estate, and especially the laborer, as they valued their own interests, to unite in putting down this murderous party of irrepressible conflict. Brown had been convicted of treason, but that was a mere drop in the bucket; he arraigned this party for treason against God and mankind. What had Virginia done that New York had not done. New York had abolished slavery; let Virginia enjoy it or abolish it in her own time and her own way. Who was to judge? We must answer for our own sins, not those of Virgian. Bhare on this constant intermeddling; shame on this banding together of citizens of a State which was called together of citizens of a State which was conc

Loud calls were made for "Kelly," "Murphy" and "Cockrane."

Hon. John Cochrane made a short speech, chiefly in denunciation of the outrage at Harper's Ferry, for which he held the republican party responsible, believing it to be the natural result of Seward's Rochester speech. They were now standing upon the eve of an election of the utmost importance, and their efforts were watched with breathless attention by their compatriots in every other State. This election must determine the fact whether William H. Seward should be the standard bearer of the republican party in the coming contest. If the party prevailed, his star would be in the ascendant; but if the democracy prevailed, the State of Now York would hold the key to the fate of the Union. The democracy of New York city would do their full duty and encourage their brethen of the rural districts.

In conclusion, he moved that the meeting adjourn, which was carried,

DUSSELDORF GALLERY, NOV. I, 1859.

To-day's HERALD says:—"We see that Page's Venus has been transferred to the gallery of the National Academy of Deeign, Tenth street, with the view, we presume, of giving its beauties the advantage of a better light," and goes on to say—"It was prehended by connoisseurs in these matters that it was badly placed and badly lighted in the Dusseldorf Gallery." The real reason for its withdrawal was, that during its stay (owing, perhaps, to your critiques thereon) a class of visiters attended the gallery who evidently came not to view a work of art, but a picture of that character which would pander to their baser passions; though they were doomed to disappointment, as they pretty plainly expressed by their manner on leaving, grumbling out some such senteace as—"Why, there is nothing immodest in that picture; it's a take in," &c. &c. This, coupled with the fact the daily journals announced that at a drinking saloon in Broadway "The Yenus on a half shell, with other unsophisticated pictures," &c. &c., were on free exhibition; and out of respect to the feelings of the artist (who, though a stranger to me, is, I believe, a gentleman of refined and most sensitive nature—one who would not wish the agent employed by him for its exhibition. As to the amount received at the doors perhaps a faulty caligraphy has caused the three to be taken for a five—the correct figures being $3,010 12. You will be pleased to understand we could have retained the picture for another month, but had the privilege to cenclude our agreement at the end of four weeks, which we did for the reasons stated above, and though, porchance, at a pecuniary loss to ourselves. B has been replaced by Mr. Wm. I. Sountag's "Dream of Italy," a work we trust, which will command the attention of your pen.
